Christmas ’96
— At the house of the King and Queen

Once a year that special time rolls around when we celebrate the birthday of our dear Lord and Husband, Jesus. — A time of joy, love and laughter that echoes the happiness we enjoy year round because of the love He so abundantly showers upon us. And so it was when Christmas paid its yearly visit to the house of the King and Queen.

When the long-awaited Christmas Eve arrived, it was heralded by the announcement that everyone could take a little “vacation” during the coming week. Well, that brought a few chuckles from the more long-standing members of our team! With Mama and Peter ever so busy and eager to get pubs to the Family (and with the Feast rapidly approaching with lots of Word-goodies for you!), having a “vacation” was truly a juggling act on the part of Gabe and Amy, our dear shepherds, who helped balance the “had-to-get-done” load between all in order to create a schedule allowing everyone at least a few days off between Christmas and the New Year. A great time was had by all, thanks to our hard-working activity director, Louise!

Most evenings we had united activities together, such as a play-a-thon game night organized by our young men (Francis, Rusty and Darren), a couple of Christmas movies, snacks and fellowship times together. We had united tree-decorating, and put together a wild manger scene with enormous stuffed bears that we found discarded (and cleaned up) as our shepherds and angels (suspended in mid-air, mind you!), and our own modern life-size creations of Mary and Joseph and baby Jesus! Very cute, but undoubtedly a most unique nativity scene!

Of course, our mini-vacation would not have been complete without... see christmas page 4

O little town of Bethlehem

(From Endureth, CRO:) The Lord worked it out this year for our singing team (mostly from Thailand) to perform in Bethlehem Square on Christmas Eve. The performance was fabulous, Spirit-filled and anointed! There were at least 20,000 people in the audience!

We were scheduled to perform last, but unexpectedly right before we went on, some top people wanted to put an Arab singer on before us for ten minutes. We initially thought this was going to throw our program, and that we would run into the 12:00 slot and “clash” with the fireworks. However, after desperate prayer and talking with those organizing the program, the Lord showed us, based on a prophecy we had received that morning, that we should take the humble seat and allow this man to go ahead, trusting that the Lord would have His perfect timing with our show.

The timing couldn’t have been better if we had planned it to the second! At midnight, just as we were about to begin our last song, the fireworks began! By this time the crowd was super excited after our Arabic numbers, and this excitement, combined with the beautiful fireworks display, set the stage for our last number. At the request of the event’s organizers, we had written the words of “Let the Whole World Know” for the city of Bethlehem, and our Arab MC introduced it and read some of the words before we sang it. It was so moving!

Before our singing team left Thailand, one of the prophesies we received said that there would be some people from the tribes of Israel whom we were to minister to, and who would be receptive to our message. This proved to be true, as on the plane, Cephas and I witnessed to a precious Israeli man. At the show, a young Israeli guy helped us with mixing, and his assistance made an incredible difference. Also, the Israeli cameramen were super turned on by our music.

There was tight military security throughout most of the program until towards the end of our show, when security was thrown to the wind as the Palestinian soldiers joined in on the dancing and singing, pointing their walkie-talkies towards the music so that their buddies on duty elsewhere could hear as well, ha!

Besides all the local media being in attendance, CNN, NBC, and other TV networks were also there. Apparently Palestinian television broadcast at least half of the program live! We later see bethlehem page 11

The island of Sumba

INDONESIA

(From Faith [of Steven] and John I. [YA]:) We sent a “boat trip” to Sumba, one of the isolated islands in Eastern Indonesia. Though most of Indonesia is Muslim, this island is populated by many Christians. This island has never been reached by the Family, so we sought the Lord, and He confirmed our trip through prophecy.

After a 24-hour boat trip, we arrived at one of the major towns — one little strip of about 20 shops! The Lord provided a free hotel room and we had a couple of fruitful days of getting out the tools. As we were preparing to move to the next town, we were approached by a sweet man. He asked for some posters and Bibles, as he wanted to give them to his people in his village. The posters are are real key here in reaching this island!

One morning we got a knock on our door, and it was someone who saw the posters at the hotel that we were last staying at. He invited us to an elementary school, so we were able to witness to the children at the school and taught them the song “The Time to be Happy” in Indonesian. The students really wanted the posters and were creating quite a stir as we passed them out. — Even the teacher got involved with passing out the posters.

Not just “here for the beer!”

JAPAN

(From Jonathan Swift [20, VS]:) I think that within the younger generation we have two classifications of people: Those who really want to do what the Letters (GNs) say, and those who are just “here for the beer.” Those who fall under the second category are usually pretty vocal about how they feel towards those on the other side.

Since my job is more out in the open, I am well known by most of the younger generation in my area, so people tend to talk about me pretty freely. I have generally learned to live with this, but I know there are other young people that could help more as bellwethers, standard bearers, positive influencers and sincere motivators of the Faith, or what have you. They do not want to, though, because of the fact that they will be talked and gossiped about.

In two recent meetings, our CROs have disclaimed some of the things that were being spoken in the meetings and at Homes about myself and the other young leadership in our area, with some young folks referring to us as being “kiss assers,” “brown nosers,” “hypocrites,” etc. I feel this disparaging labeling is a main reason why more young people aren’t willing to take up these types of [leadership] roles in the Family. Negative peer pressure is an ugly thing!

O utreach turf

USA

(From David Dane, Phoebe and Ella:) Being a mobile team by definition, we get around a lot. When we arrive in a new state or city and call the local Homes, we are often met with a “cold” attitude. We do understand that some mobile teams have been on “slash and burn” missions to raise funds for their Homes, but we do not feel this is the case with us. We try to act like Christian missionaries and have several times met sheep and contacts whose addresses we gave to the local Homes for further follow-up.

The Charter is clear on this issue as far as outreach areas go, and states that mobile teams should remember to act in love when choosing their outreach areas. This principle, however, also seems to apply to the other way around. The resident Homes would do much better if they regard us “mobiles” as fellow laborers in the Lord’s vineyard, instead of intruders and competitors for “turf.” At the least, it would be good to investigate who we are and what our vision is.

The only other alternative for us mobile teams is to choose areas where there are no other Homes we could disturb (like the Yukon, Mojave Desert, Everglades or Rocky Mountains, ha!). We would much rather be close to our loving Family for strength and encouragement, and pray we all will learn to work together in love, so the Lord can pour down His blessings.

The “teen” difference

USA

(From Sara [21, of Frank, VS]:) During our teen camps, it has been interesting to note the difference between TS and DO teens. The TS teens I observed here have their problems and are not perfect, but seem to be more respectful of the Word, more obedient and appreciative of being here.

Even in their appearance and dress, the girls don’t plaster themselves with make-up, which is quite a bit different from many of our DO teens, sad to say. Perhaps since they have been out of the DO Family for some time, they are more appreciative; and because they are around System influences and know what is out there, the pull of the System for some of them is not such a big deal. They are not so into their styles and stuck on many of these things that some DO teens are so engrossed in.

Some of the TS teens that have rejoined have done so well, and have put some of our DO teens to shame in their desire for the Word. You see this in the ones who really want to rejoin as DO members; they are serious and their whole goal is to find a Home to join.

(From Frank [20, of Sara, VS]:) One TS teen girl made an interesting comment. She has been in the System and doesn’t have a lot of the outward hang-ups that many DO teens have. She said she has noticed that many teens (both DO and TS) don’t accept themselves the way that they are. They don’t accept the way God made them, or their beauty, and they try to do all these things to try to make themselves look better, put on more make-up, etc. She said, “If guys don’t like you for the way that you are, well then, forget them. Go for the ones who like you the way you are.”

It seems some of our younger Family girls are getting into decking themselves out the way systemites do; even copying the lower strata of society in their dress and make-up. But our Family girls are so attractive already that they don’t need that!

True love and friendship

EUROPE

(From James and Sara:) A lot has been written about being loving, but when it comes down to it, do we really do it? How we treat each other in the Family is something that has been on my heart for some time. I’ve been on both ends of the stick, being used and using people.

What it comes down to is: Are we really friends with each other, or is it for what we get out of it, or to meet some need? I do have friends in the Family, but I know a lot of people who have used me, and, Lord help me, I’ve been in positions of authority and have done the same. Rules are made to help us do this [loving], but they are only rules and not the end in itself. It needs to come from the heart!

SGAs reaching out

USA

(From a 23-year-old male:) Something that stood out to me in the recent delegates meetings held by Peter in the US were the prophecies he read regarding the need for the first and second generations to work together to win our JETTs and teens. (Editor’s note: These will be published in an upcoming GN, I presume.)

I saw this work well at the JETT camp recently held in Miami. An even number of first and second-generation adults worked together to shepherd the JETTs, teach the classes, and perform the skills. It wasn’t always easy to work together as a teamwork, as there were often differences between us, but because our main goal for those two weeks was to be a blessing to the JETTs and we were desperate with the Lord to not fail them, the result was a united and anointed JETT camp. Had there not been unity or had one faction attempted to “take over” and run the camp without esteeming the other’s opinions, I think the JETTs would have suffered, as they would not have benefited from the input that each generation had to offer.

Each JETT was so different, and it took all of us working together to reach them. A few of the JETT boys weren’t really entering in during inspirations, classes and activities until the DC Band arrived for the last four days of the camp. I was shocked to then see these JETTs raising their hands, praising the Lord and excitedly answering questions in class. — They did it with the DC Band, following their sample.

The JETTs related to Vas and his personal testimony of the mistakes he had made in his teen years and the weaknesses he still has to fight; therefore they admired his dedication and desire to serve the Lord and win souls, etc. Vas took time to fellowship with and to encourage the JETTs, and would go by their rooms at bedtime to sing them Loving Jesus songs, share lessons he’d learned, and tell them the details surrounding his decision to dedicate his life to Jesus.

The delegates meetings challenged us younger people to win our brothers and sisters. Often we SGAs tend to want to bunch up in YA Homes or Homes with a large population of young people, rather than working with a larger family or a Home without many others our age. I know this won’t earn me points among my fellow SGAs, but I feel that many SGAs here in the US base their decisions on what kind of situations will make them happy and comfortable, and are basically looking out for themselves. I think if we SGAs started looking out towards the fields (even within the Family) that are white unto harvest, it would help us be happier in general.

It’s a mix-up!

(From Jasmine, for the Free Zine team:) By now you have probably read the notice in Grapevine #10, explaining about the new box for mail which has opened in California, and how anything not specifically directed to “The Grapevine” will be returned. Please go ahead and send your mail to the new California box addressed as follows:

The Grapevine
attr: Free Zine
PO Box 4938
Orange CA 92863, USA

Should you get any of your Free Zine letters returned, it’s probably because the Texas box forwarded them on to California, and the California box found that it was not marked “The Grapevine,” and therefore returned them! Ooops! Please don’t worry, but go ahead and resend it, following the instructions here. Thanks so much, and sorry for the mix-up!

Creditor needed

RUSSIA

(From the Moscow Service Center:) We have a good friend here in Russia whom we’ve known for the last few years, and who now owns his own trading company. He would like to help the Family on a bigger scale, so he’s asking the Family to find him a Western company that would grant his company a loan of 3-5 million dollars; 4% of which he would donate to WS, and 0.5% to the Home that finds the creditor.

So, if you are interested in receiving a substantial gift for your Home ($15,000-$25,000) — read on! Here’s the letter from our friend, S.:

Dear Friends,

God bless you in your difficult but fruitful work of helping people to believe and find the truth in Jesus. My wife and I pray continually that the works of the Family during these Last Days will help to turn many, many Russian people to the Lord.

By the Lord’s will, our daughter, V., and her husband, I., are in the Family, and work in Siberia. It was because of our daughter that we received Jesus into our hearts, and our lives changed. Now we have a grandson, P., and we are very happy that he has the opportunity to grow up in an atmosphere of love for the Lord and others. It’s a big privilege, especially in comparison with this devilish environment that many children are being raised in. As much as I can, I try to help my daughter in their work, as well as the Family Home in the city where I live. But I know that my help could be much bigger.

I worked as a businessman for the last five years, and last spring I opened a joint-stock company. The details of it are in the enclosed letter. [Note: This letter will be sent to you upon request.]

I would like to help the Family on a larger scale, with the funds from my company’s income. In order to do that, we need to find a Western bank or company that could give us a currency credit of US 3-5 million dollars at a yearly rate of 3.5 percent. These funds will be used to buy grain for flour factories of our region, as well as sunflower oil and other goods for further wholesale.

With the Lord’s help, if we get the desired interest on the credit, we could, as stated in our appeal letter, help the Family with 4% of the sum of the credit. So, with the credit of, let’s say, 4 million dollars, this would amount to $160,000, meaning more than half of the net profit of the credit our company used. Right now we are working with internal Russian credits, which have extremely high interest rates, and all our profit goes to cover the interest.

Could you, dear friends, help us find businessmen in the West who keep in touch with the Family, and could give our company this credit? Then, with the Lord’s help, every one of us would make a new step in fulfilling our Christian duty.

Yours, S.

We have an official letter from S.’s company, explaining in business terms the details of the needed credit. We will send this letter, as well as more details, to anyone who is interested in finding the creditor for this Russian company. Contact us by sending a message through the ABM to the Moscow Service Center. If you have a GP e-mail address, please include it so we can get back to you quickly.
It’s so encouraging to read testimonies about sacrificial things that Family members are doing, especially in relation to young people investing their lives in our children.

It really touches me to hear of things such as those mentioned in Grapevine #5, like the letter to Mama from H., a single mom, where she mentions the teen who said he wanted to come help her full-time; Ahlai’s article where she mentions YA Stephanie [who committed herself to childcare], etc.

As Mama said, when we hear news like this we know that everything will be all right with the Family. If we have this kind of sacrificial love, then surely we’ll make it, even if things seem rough at times. Thanks for publishing the glad tidings! Let’s hear more about this — it’s the heart of our Family!

— FROM LILY FIGHTER (21), NEPAL

In the latest Christmas Kidz Mag of 1996, under Leilani’s poem “What Is Christmas For,” it was mentioned that

The Grapevine consists of news from Family members around the world, and is not intended to be an official organ to reflect WS policy or views. Family policy and spiritual guidance will continue to be published in the GNs and FSMs.

Meanwhile, our Home team prepared baskets of cookies, which we delivered to our neighbors, friends, contacts and other acquaintances. A couple teams also went to Christmas parties held by our landlord.

At one large party, a couple of our young people were able to perform and sing several carols (along with a local band hired by our landlord) for the 70-80 people attending! We also invited our landlord and his extended family to our home for our traditional Christmas dinner — turkey, stuffing and the works! Afterwards, we all sang carols together and were able to witness to them further about the real meaning of Christmas.

Now, back to Mama and Peter’s recent trip... the Lord told them that while they were on this trip, He was going to open doors for them to witness! During their trip, Mama and Peter, along with their two helpers who accompanied them, distributed more than 2,000 tracts, giving one to virtually everyone they met! They had some in-depth witnessing adventures as well. — Imagine being witnessed to by Mama or Peter! Cool, huh? They had oodles of incredible testimonies to tell of the precious people they met and ministered to while on their trip, and as the Lord called it, their “faith trip”! Far out!

So, that was our “Christmas at the King and Queen’s house!” Hope you enjoyed this little account! Thanks to all of you, our precious Family, for your love and faithful witnessing during Christmas of ’96! We love you!

STUDIO NEWS

BRAZIL
(From the BVM team) We slowed down our production during the month of December in order to spread the Christmas message! Three of our buskers took out a box of our brand new local language Christmas CDs, and on their first night out distributed 22 in just two hours! Meanwhile, our kids have been caroling up a storm in local orphanages and schools.

Simon and Daniela (SGAs) and their two kids arrived from California. Simon will be helping in our audio/video departments and Daniela with costumes and set design! There are some more arrivals on the way — Pedro Emmanuel (national artist) and John Michael (17) from Colombia. With the Lord’s anointing, we pray they’ll be able to help our cartooning department take off.

Don’t miss the debut of the “Hallelujah Chorus” froggie band on the next Family Fun show! They’re a multi-national bunch of frogs: Jasper (keyboard), Pancho (drums), Freddie (lead guitar) and Susie and Linda (vocals). Then there’s Jimmy, who just hopped in from Jamaica to do the lead vocals for the “Hallelujah Chorus” rendition of the “I International I Love You!” song, coming your way soon on Treasure Attic #9. Last, but not least, the froggies have their own version of Braveheart! That’s Scottie (the froggie) who just arrived last week from the Highlands. — Stay tuned, froggie lovers!

For the latest Latin news, don’t miss the one-hour new Latin American Video News #2 — just released! It’s the hottest L.A. Video News to date — featuring our Latin Family around the continent! PERU
(From Juan, CRO) One of the most rewarding experiences we have had while in Peru has been working on the recording of the “To Jesus With Love” tape with the Loving Jesus praise prophecies (to be released to the Homes for the Family Feast). By a miracle we’ve been able to finalize the tape in both Spanish and Portuguese. We’re presently working on printing the accompanying booklet, which, by God’s grace, will be ready in time to send to all of our Homes before the Feast.

POETRY PLUG

(From Jenna) Calling all poets! Thanks to those of you who have sent in some of your literary masterpieces to the Grapevine. Unfortunately, due to lack of space and trying to keep the Grapevine as a “news” medium, we’re not able to print your wonderful poems. But we still want your poems! Lord willing, there is an upcoming poetry mag in the works, for which we’d like to solicit and get our hands on your poetry!

We want to make this poetry mag real good, and we’re sure you feel the same way. So we’d like to ask for the very best you have to offer — not every poem you’ve written, but your “cream of the crop,” so to speak. Only the best! We’ll take ’em on any subject, any length, any style. Send your best poems to the Grapevine, and we’ll get them to the poetry mag crew! Thanks!

Tract power

COLOMBIA

(From Patty Cromwell, 17;) Recently when witnessing, we gave a “To You With Love” tract to a man who was carrying a bunch of clothes and stuff in his arms. When he started reading the tract, he began to cry. He then proceeded to tell us that his wife had just thrown him out of the house, and since he didn’t have anything else left in this life, he was on his way to commit suicide!

After reading this message and receiving Jesus into his heart, his whole countenance changed. He told us that this tract, given to him at such a crucial time, had saved his life. He decided not to commit suicide, but instead was going to try a new life! Imagine what one simple tract can do for someone!

Club competition

USA

(From Zion and Grace Mountain, TS;) This past month, some of the six- to twelve-year-old kids in our neighborhood formed a little club called “No Boys Allowed.” They hung around, did car washes to raise funds and knocked on doors asking for donations. They also threw their garbage on the ground. This club caused a lot of fighting amongst the kids, especially the younger boys. Many residents complained about this club, but the parents had no control over their kids.

So our kids, Ava (12), Arnie (9), Andrew (7) and April (5) started a club called “TLC” (Tender Loving Care). They went around for an hour every morning, cleaning up the neighborhood and picking up all the garbage on the street. They went around to the neighbors, especially to older folks who had no help, and offered to help out. They cleaned their houses, mowed and watered lawns and even helped them cook dinner.

Last week the president of our “neighborhood watch” called for a meeting. The topic was the “No Boys Allowed” club vs. the “TLC” club, and of course everyone spoke very highly of the “TLC” club. The next morning, all the kids from the “No Boys Allowed” club came knocking on our door, because they had ended their club and wanted to join the “TLC” club!

Orphan summer camp

HUNGARY

(From the Lighthouse Home;) We held a very inspiring 10-day summer camp with 13 orphan children from Russia. The idea for this camp came via a request from one of our regular supporters. The children’s trip was coordinated by a Russian children’s foundation which helps needy families and children. Some of the children had lost their parents as a result of Chernobyl, while others’ parents had died in the war in Chechnya.

The Lord clearly confirmed that He wanted us to go ahead with this camp, and we received verses that gave us the vision and faith to go ahead with this major project. We were very excited, but not sure where we could house and feed 15 more people, and what we would do with them for the 10 days we would be together. However, step by step the Lord led us and wonderfully supplied, and this project has consequently turned out to be our Home’s highlight of the year.

The Lord worked it out for us to stay at a local camping facility which the Family is able to use for free. Five caravans were used for the camp. The use of a minibus was donated by a top Mercedes executive after explaining to him about the camp. The Lord led us to set up a schedule of fun and interesting outings for the kids almost every day of their stay — outings to the circus, a fair, boating, fishing and swimming trips, visits to historical sites, meals out in restaurants (all provisioned, etc).

Our primary concern was how to not only make this a fun time for the kids, but also a meaningful time in which they could get to know the Lord and receive a basic understanding of the Word and the Lord’s love for them. One of our concerns was how we would introduce this spiritual aspect to Raisa and Galina, the two middle-aged women accompanying the children; but the Lord had a simple answer to this question.

On the second evening, one of our girls read the “Your Best Friend” poster with the Russian women in their caravan, and they all sweetly prayed to receive Jesus. The next morning Raisa came up to us with the poster in hand and said, “I have been reading this, and it seems like it might be a good idea to get all the kids together and read it with them. What do you think?” — It sounded like a good idea to us too, and from then on we had daily devotions. Galina commented that we had the best Christian literature for children she had ever seen, and said, “When I go back home, could you send some of your colleagues in Moscow to my school to give Bible classes to my students?”

Galina got saved with us and couldn’t wait to go home and witness to a friend of hers who was dying of cancer. She said our camp was the best of its kind (she had previously been to similar children’s camps in the US, Russia, Slovenia and Yugoslavia). She said that she gave the children such a variety of activities, stimulated their thinking, and that our calm and peaceful spirits had rubbed off on the kids and they were much better behaved with us. Wow!

Raisa was already saved and taught Sunday school classes and worked with the deaf in Moscow. After a fishing competition we had with the children, which her deaf son Marat won (he caught seven fish), she took his picture with the fish he had caught and said, “You don’t know what this will mean to the deaf children I work with back in Moscow — to see a deaf child being able to happily and confidently live and work together with hearing children.”

She was thrilled that Marat was able to have this experience of living and working together with “real” Christians, as she hopes that he will grow up to be a missionary!

Another interesting aspect of the camp was that it brought us a lot closer to our contacts and friends who got involved with the camp. A man who donates money has previously been quite business like, but after he spent a day fishing with us and the children, he was glowing and asked if he could get more involved in other of our CTP projects. He also paid for lunch and two snacks for the 20 of us and donated a fishing rod to each child. As we left his family to return to the camp, all the children in unison shouted out from the minibus in Russian: “one-two-three, spaceeba (thank you)!” He was so touched; tears welled up in his eyes as he thanked us for making this a special day for him!

During the camp, we got so close to each of the children and dear Raisa and Galina, and there were many tears shed as the kids got on the bus to leave for the airport. The attaché from the Russian embassy watched us all hugging and kissing as the kids boarded the bus. He said, “The children tell me that they have had a wonderful time with you. Please call me next week, we must keep in touch!” And so ended our summer camp in Hungary — a truly sweet and memorable experience for us all!

Spirit song-writing

CHILE

(From Amor Comfort, 21;) I was thrilled when, in answer to specific prayer, a Heavenly messenger helped me finish a song that, unbeknownst to me, she probably had helped me start. When I was reading the first Summit Letters ’96 GN, I started to write words for a song, but didn’t understand what the song’s theme was yet. All I knew was that it was about “Something to Say.”

One prayer night before the Summit video meetings were held, someone saw Joan of Arc in a vision, and at the same time someone upstairs with the children heard armor clashing and got scared, but afterwards felt a peace about it. We felt the Lord was sending Joan of Arc to help during the upcoming Summit video meetings and that maybe she could give the keynote address to the teens.

A group of people got together and Joan of Arc spoke beautifully about the “whispers” and voices she would hear and the importance of our learning to hear those whispers— in other words, prophecy. She emphasized that we don’t have much time, because our years of preparation are shorter than we think.

Then on the second day of the Summit video meetings, one of the VSs mentioned to me that it would be nice if someone could receive a song about Joan of Arc. I thought, “Sure, that would be nice—but Joan of Arc? How do you write a song about her?” I had practically forgotten about the song I had started, but I felt the Lord speaking to me to write a song.

The day before the meetings ended I stayed back from get-out and asked the Lord for His anointing on how to start the song, telling Him that if it was His will, He was going to have to do a miracle. The Lord reminded me of the “Something to Say” song. I was so shocked to see that it talked about the whispers and went right along with what Joan of Arc had said in prophecy. So, I got a copy of the prophecy that was received, and with Joan of Arc’s help, I finished the song in only two hours! I had specifically prayed for her to help me, and I believe she did.

It’s so amazing when you know the Lord is working and is in control; you have this certain peace that nothing else can give. GBY with happy song writing!

Sunset beach wedding

JAPAN

(From Stephen:) My brother, Simon, had been in the Family for many years and is now a successful restaurant owner in England. He and his fiancee had decided to get married on a beautiful Greek island, and they invited me to attend their wedding.

When I arrived, I found out that the mayor’s office had notified the young couple that their wedding would have to be postponed for a few days because of Greece’s national election, which was being held the next day. This posed a problem, as Simon had invited 30 guests from England for his wedding and the date could not be changed. As a solution, he asked me to be the pastor at the wedding. He told me that he had wanted to have a Family-style wedding, and was pleased at this turn of events. I began working with my brother and his business partner, and we planned to have the wedding ceremony on the beach next to a beautiful Greek taverna where the wedding party was to be held later. Simon’s business partner, Clint, is an interior decorator, and with the help of simple props he created an outdoor chapel on the beach. They hired a beautifully adorned horse and wagon for the bride’s arrival and scattered thousands of purple flower petals as a pathway to the “chapel.”

Before leaving Japan, I had anticipated that I might be called upon to at least give a speech at the wedding, so I had brought my MOP and Good Thots. These now became my tools to prepare the wedding sermon.

On the wedding day, close to 40 guests attended. The wedding ceremony was a mixture of the traditional and the untraditional. I began by reading Bible verses on marriage and included a quote from Dad, followed by poems and songs from members of the “congregation.” After Simon and Mary exchanged vows and rings, I held hands with them and prayed that the Lord would bless their marriage. The bride’s father ended the wedding with a touching Irish folk song about love and marriage, and by this time many of the guests were moved to tears. During the following days, I was able to witness to almost all of my brother’s friends, many of whom were very receptive.

The Need in Russia

RUSSIA

(From Timothy Helmet:) Hi from the land of the north! In the Summit videos, Peter mentioned about the support that WS sends the Homes in Russia, and how the Homes in Russia couldn’t make it without this support, which is so true.

Prior to the beginning of 1996, new and old Russian Homes benefited from a monthly gift, which they still receive. But since the beginning of 1996, the new homes that have opened and the new homes that are now opening in Russia are not able to benefit anymore from a monthly WS gift, as there’s not enough to go around.

We wanted to share this with you just in case sometimes you may think the Homes’ needs aren’t as great as they are, since there is WS monthly support for the Homes here. The fact is: it’s not going to all the Homes—and we really need all the help you’re able to send.

Thanks for all the help you have sent to the laborers here! Even though we ourselves don’t have a direct monthly gift, the various free services provided by the ABM and SC, as well as the free posters and other, are such a big help!—Which WS and your gifts have made possible! We appreciate it!

(Note from EURCRO: We thought to add a little more info and confirmation to the above, as it’s true that not all Homes in Russia or the former East Bloc countries receive a monthly WS gift. Even the Homes that do receive a gift are not fully supported, but usually only get enough to cover their rent. When there were only a few Homes in Russia and Eastern Europe a couple of years back, they all did receive a gift, but now that the number of Homes in the CIS and Eastern Europe has greatly increased, less than half of the Homes receive a WS gift.

(As, as you can see, support for our missionaries in Russia is still very much needed and vital in order for them to continue on with the important mission they have of reaching these countries in the short time we may have left there. Thank you so much for your faithful support of the Russian work and Homes. We know you’ll share in the rewards of all the souls won and people reached with His love!)
from a man who already has a wife and a number of children, it may be unsafe for him to send the single mother financial help. But if the father’s home is doing okay financially, I think it would be good to consider helping out the single mother and their child/children. Many Homes send a monthly gift to overseas missions, and perhaps this could go to the single mother instead.

Since the Charter, I’ve seen many senior teens, YA and SGA girls become pregnant and not have fathers for their children. I think we young people need to really consider when “going for the gold” that children are often the consequence and they are a serious responsibility. Children need both a mother and a father figure.

— K. (FEMALE, 17), USA

I fully agree that men should take responsibility for their kids, but I don’t think it could be legislated. How in the world can a Family brother be expected to send support ($$) to his “woman and child” on any kind of regular basis? It wouldn’t really be the brother himself giving it, but it would be his Home, since we have “all things common” and people generally don’t have much personal cash.

It would also be a factor that Homes would have to consider when bringing someone into their Home. In addition to “Do you have any debts and liabilities?” they’d have to ask, “Do you have to make monthly child support payments?” That would definitely knock points off any guy’s chances of being accepted into a Home. — Maybe that’s the idea, to scare ’em into it, but it doesn’t seem real practical or enforceable.

— ANONYMOUS (FEMALE, 21), EARTH

I’ve heard that many are now permitted to keep a certain percentage of their income, and also that folks are free to go out on their free days and raise personal money. Perhaps these methods could be employed to raise necessary support for a dude’s kid and their mom? Got any spare change, you guys? Come on, you can do it!

— ANONYMOUS (MALE, 50), EARTH

I am a single mother with two kids. I have been supported financially by my kids’ father (who also has a family with six kids) for nearly a year and it has been a super blessing in my being able to get my kids’ needs supplied.

Above the money factor, it’s a blessing to feel that the father of your child loves and supports you and the kids. — This is one of the most important needs single moms have: to feel loved and cared for and supported at least morally, by the father and those around her. I would encourage fathers who have children with single mothers to make sure she knows that you care and pray for her. It really makes a difference!

— D. (ADULT WOMAN), EUROPE

Yes, by all means! Fathers should be just as responsible for the children they’ve had as are the mothers. But in my experience, despite the oodles of Letters which say exactly that, they are not.

Some of my children were born while I was married and some afterwards. None of their fathers have helped financially. The single men who are the fathers of my youngest children have shown absolutely no interest in their children, not even an occasional note to ask how they’re doing or a phone call when they’re nearby. They’ve made it clear that I’m “on my own,” so to speak. I know the Lord will never fail, but as Mama mentioned recently, both children and mothers also need a father or co-parent “with skin on.”

I doubt it would do any good to try to legislate righteousness by mandating a monthly gift. In the System, the child support system has been a dismal flop, with parents arguing over amounts, fathers not making payments, mothers using visitation as a weapon, and the poor kids getting caught in the middle.

I feel that fathers should of their own free will be helping regularly. Dad has talked about the responsibility of fathers as far back as “Sex Problems” and “Divorce,” in 1975. In the Letter “Desertion”, written in 1981, he said: “I want to hear no more of these irresponsible men who go around fucking single sisters and are unwilling to take the responsibility of the results, leaving her alone and unmade, an uncared-for mother with a pitiful orphaned fatherless child! We are just not going to have it in the Family any more, and that is all there is to it! ... Either you toe the line and take care of that girl and her child if she wants you to, or get out” (ML #102:9a, 11a).

— ANONYMOUS (ADULT WOMAN), EARTH

If a guy wants to go around enjoying life with all the girls, I feel he should be compelled out of love to be helping financially, especially if he is not living with them.

— D. (16, MALE), MIDEAST

I think the father is single, I think he should try to help as much as possible, as God’s gift is God’s work. The best solution if the father is single would be to marry the mother, if she too is single.

— D. (ADULT MAN), POLAND

Another possibility might be the creation of Dad’s old idea of “widow’s colonies.” If an area has a large abundance of single moms, maybe through a referendum they could vote that a certain percentage of funds from the Homes in the area/country could help pay for housing and some basic needs for the moms to live together and school their kids. While living in a normal field Home might be the best solution, this might be an alternative.

— C. (ADULT WOMAN), CHINA
As a single mother for two years on the field of India, the Lord never failed to supply for me and my four children. I never felt I was a burden to the Home, though I realized that a single brother could contribute more to the Home through witnessing and their availability.

As I see it, the Lord is the ultimate father for all the children in the Family and the ultimate mate for all mothers. The Lord always takes care of His Own, and the brother who has a child and feels responsible will support his child as best he can. If he is in a situation that limits his financial capabilities, then he will pray for that child, and “more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of.”

— R. (MARRIED ADULT WOMAN), POLAND

Why do we let people separate so easily and then ask the rest of the Family to care for the single mom and kids? In this respect, I think the father should be held responsible to care for the single mother and child/children with a monthly gift per child. I’m thankful that the Charter made it more difficult for people to separate. As hard as it is at times, I think the kids would’ve suffered a lot more if my wife and I would’ve separated. If parents are held responsible to care for the kids, including financially, then people might think twice or thrice before separating, and it might be easier for our single moms to find a Home and the help they need.

— J. (MARRIED ADULT MAN)

As a single mum with four children living on the needy field of India, I would be thankful to get monthly pledges from the kids’ fathers. As my kids are growing up, they wonder about their flesh fathers, and it could be a good sample to them of how far our care and love goes. I want my kids to know that the Law of Love works, and that each one of them is the result of it.

Of course, our communal lifestyle ensures that all children are well taken care of, regardless of how many parents they have. But even a token gesture or something sent for a birthday or Christmas would be nice, if they couldn’t afford a monthly gift. I think it would also be a good sample to outsiders and to the single mum’s parents.

— TABITHA PRAISEMORE, INDIA

If it came from the heart and the boy in question agreed with it, it could be a real sweet token of love and concern. No sum of money could ever close to all the time, money, tears, and care that go into the raising of a child and always being there for them. But it might be a start towards each individual taking a more personal sense of responsibility when it comes to single moms and their children who need extra time and care.

However, in all fairness to the boys, I do feel that some of us girls can be too proud and selfish to be willing to accept help, which would put a boy in an awkward position. I’d probably be inclined to try to manage on my own, if I felt that the boy didn’t want to do it and considered it a burden.

— L. (SINGLE FEMALE, 21), ASIA

Say a girl becomes pregnant and the father wants to marry the girl, but she turns him down. Is he then responsible to support her, if she could have married him? I think “no.”

Generally, I think it might be a solution to have a means whereby the moms do get more financial help. It might also put a damper on guys running from one girl to the next without much thought, seeing they might have a big bill waiting at the end of the road if they haven’t been acting responsibly.

— R (MARRIED FEMALE, 21), INDIA

I think it should be the personal choice of each father whether to support his ex-wife and family or not, according to his faith. It would be nice if he could help support her, but nowadays with smaller homes and a lot more responsibility on each person’s part (especially singles), I don’t see how aside from their pretty full and tight schedules, they are going to be able to put aside extra funds monthly for their families. If he has steady income, that might be a different story.

— A. (FEMALE, 17), BRAZIL

Though it would be nice if each single mom could receive compensation, I think it would be difficult for every guy to be supporting every woman they ever had a child with, seeing some guys have been receiving “gold medals” internationally. I think the women should pray whether or not they want to go all the way and make some agreement beforehand.

— M. (16, FEMALE), MIDEAST

I’ve not yet been a single mom, so I’m speaking from a wealth of ignorance in that sense, ha! I would venture to say it’s just as much work to take care of a brood of kids by oneself (even if that’s all you do — and some are teamworkers or full-time outreachers, etc., on top of it!) as it would be to do a little extra fund-raising, which I think the Lord would bless.

I sympathize with the financial side of things, although I don’t think it’s an impossible hurdle to jump. One idea would be to adopt a regular supporter whose gifts would be designated for that purpose. I think it would be a tremendous boost in covering some of the kiddos’ personal needs, etc. “Where there’s a will there’s always a way,” and the effort would be precious.

— M. (FEMALE, 20), ASCRO

A thought comes to mind as I cogitate on this subject: $2 + $2 = $4! It’s easy to forget that during passionate moments when all you’re thinking about is, as someone once put it, “the grand prize.”

I’ve seen people who have made a decision to “go for the gold,” but when the golden gift arrives, they seem rather surprised that “it actually happened!” I tend to feel that if people are going to go all the way, they should look at their sharing partner and think, “Do I want to spend the rest of my life with this person?” If not, maybe they should do something other than fuck. Or, if fucking’s the only way it works for them, then I dare say, go for the silver, if they don’t have the faith to trust the Lord and are willing to take responsibility for a child.

I’m not at all advocating birth control. The point I’m making is, make your decision and stick to it. If you don’t have the faith to have a child right away, don’t do it. It’s true, dear friends, birth control isn’t always 100% effective. So even with using birth control you may get pregnant. The key is: REALLY PRAY beforehand and be determined in your heart that what you’re doing is right, and stick to your decision. Don’t just wait for the auspicious moment and do what comes “naturally.”

— M.B. (20), USA

Who said you can’t be a single father? Let the guys take the kids. Ha!

— S. (17, FEMALE) MIDEAST

I seem pretty easy for guys to “get away” without having to take any real responsibility for our sisters getting pregnant. Shouldn’t the daddies be responsible to continue to support their kids, even if they are living in another Home and especially if the mommy is living alone somewhere? I know many brothers who have several kids with different single moms, but the moms have to bear the burden and the daddies are “footloose and fancy free,” or have taken on new wives with new kids which they work to support, but the old wife and old kids are out on their own.

— C. AND J. (MARRIED ADULT COUPLE), USA

I’ve been a single mom for eight years. My ex is remarried, is on the field, and has 10 kids. I wouldn’t think of asking him for support. In fact, I send him and his family “care packages” and sometimes funds. The support I wish I would have received more of is communication and a continuing of my closest friendship. To me the issue is love, not money. Why wouldn’t the absent parent want to let his/her child know, “I love and pray for and want to know you.” Maybe the “custodial parent” is unreasonably expecting a disciple who has forsaken all to give something he doesn’t have — private finances.

For me, God has been my provider and the key to receiving has been giving. Sure I’ve worried and scrimped. Who hasn’t? My help and support have come from my brethren and from hard work, from trusting the Lord and lots of prayer.

he said: I heartily agree that being gentle-men are an area that Family are lacking in
I’m glad that Mama could help bridge the places between the boys
I would like to bring up the other side (if I must say it that way). Hearing how some young women in the Family were having battles with being attracted to non-Family members, and that these outsiders also found them appealing is not a surprise. Our Family girls are the best! But, as I’m sure most guys will confirm, we have at different times had the same dilemma. I’m nothing exceptional, but I have met beautiful, sweet system girls, who told me they would drop their boyfriend in a minute if I would give them a chance.

I went through hard times when I was younger, living in Homes with Family girls who felt they were too good for me and I could never reach their standard. I remember at that time, system girls started looking very good. It became a point of frustration as I knew that I couldn’t do anything with them but they seemed so sweet and much more understanding. I guess it’s how the girls felt with the system boys being so gentlemanly.
I think especially with teens, because girls mature faster, they don’t understand how the boys could be the way they are. The boys’ egos are then deflated and pride hurt; thus the girl/ boy war begins. After a while you grow out of it and learn to get along (GREAT, in fact!).
The point I want to make is that we both need to strive to do better: the girls in not getting critical and shutting themselves off, but instead, trying to help the boys overcome the things they are going through. And the boys need to accept this help, and endeavor to be more gentlemanly.

One last thing is that even though some system young people often seem to be so sweet, it usually doesn’t last. Move in with one of them and in a few years (or less) you’ll see why people’s lives in the system are so screwed up.

Q: We very much enjoyed the testimony regarding the Jerash Festival in Grapevine
#2 and thought it would be inspiring to share with our Arab friends/supporters. But since it is a DO pub, we can’t really show it to them or give it to them to read. We wanted to ask if it would be possible to include this testimony in a GP pub like the FAR.

A: You’re right, the Grapevine is a DO/TS pub, therefore it is not permissible to let friends of the Family or others who are not of DO or TS status read the Grapevine. We will endeavor to publish the more outstanding testimonies in some type of GP format, such as the FAR.

However, if you have prayed about it and feel the Lord wants you to, you may relate —

The Wind and the People of Siam

THAILAND

(Editor's note: A few weeks before Christmas, Mama felt led to ask the Lord for a special and personal message for the Thai people, to show them how much Jesus loves them. After one of Mama's staff members received this message from the Lord in prophecy, it was prepared as a tract and sent to the Family in Thailand shortly before their Christmas fellowship, attended by their close friends and acquaintances.)

(From ASCRO) Thank you, Mama, for the beautiful prophecies you sent us for the people of Thailand. We translated them immediately and shared them at our meeting. It was so moving and such a precious message from the Lord to the 300 people present.

One dear friend, who is the president of the company where we held our program, was very impressed with the prophecy tract, titled, “The Wind and the People of Siam.” He said it was a very beautiful message and suggested that we put it on tape for our friends. He said the translation was excellent and he appreciated the poetic language used within the prophecy. One of our witnesses, who was sitting next to him, explained to him a little more about prophecy, and that this was a message that someone in another part of the world had received, and he was quite amazed by this.

It’s such a precious reminder from the Lord on how He looks at the country of Thailand, their culture and sweetness. We had the message from the Lord printed in a four-page booklet, with a nice drawing of a Thai scene on the cover. Everybody received a copy as they left the program.

Detention and Miraculous Deliverance!

LATVIA

(Compiled from various EURCRO reports) In August, David and Paloma encountered some problems with the authorities when setting up their Home in Riga (the capital of Latvia), and we received word that they were going to be deported. After desperate prayer, the situation changed, and the Latvian Foreign Ministry profusely apologized for the treatment they received. Upon learning that they were bringing humanitarian aid into the country, David, Paloma and family were given one-year humanitarian aid visas.

However, on November 27th, while trying to leave the country by ferry for business in Stockholm, Sweden, with two of their JETTs, they were stopped by immigrations and told that their visas were invalid, and that they would be deported. Immigrations officials seemed to think they had busted some kind of child-smuggling racket and refused to believe that David and Paloma’s 10 children were their own. They questioned their marital status, and accused them of forging their passports. Immigrations then brought the rest of their children and brethren from the Home in for questioning.

The authorities were rough and aggressive, and interrogated the brethren for several hours, while various allegations (none related to the Family) were brought against them. The authorities allowed Paloma (eight months pregnant) to return home with their children and other Home members. However, they held David and their teenage son, Sam, in detention with three other Russian men. The room had no windows, was cold (it was winter) and no blankets were provided. They were given one bowl of soup and two cups of water each day.

The next day, Paloma visited the Ministry of Foreign Affairs official who had issued their visa. Upon returning home, she found six police officers in the house. They had been insisting that their daughter Christina (14) come to Immigrations for questioning, which she had refused to do. Paloma called the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, who persuaded the police to leave the house.

The following day, the police returned to the Home. Paloma called their lawyer, who talked with the chief inspector. After taking photographs of the children and inspecting everyone’s passports, the inspector was satisfied and apologized for the policemen’s behavior.

Paloma phoned the Spanish Embassy (she and David are both Spaniards), and the consul immediately contacted the Latvian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The consul was very upset about the authorities’ treatment of David and Paloma. He told Paloma, “You are saints—having a large family and doing a work like this!” He tried to work out David and Sam’s release, but without success.

The reasons for the investigation by the Immigration police were unknown, but it was suspected to be part of a wider crackdown by the police on illegal aliens in an effort to improve relations with West European countries. David and Paloma happened to be caught in the middle, mistaken for child traffickers even though all their papers were in order!

It so happened that there was a conference about to be held between the President/Prime Minister of Latvia and the Spanish Prime Minister, and the consul said he would bring up our situation in his meeting with the Latvian Prime Minister.

On December 4th, in answer to the desperate prayers of many, David and Sam were released from detention! David, Paloma and family were deported from Latvia to Sweden on the 6th, as it seemed too humbling for the government to admit that they had made a grave mistake to begin with. They entered Sweden without any problems, despite the deportation stamp in their passports. God bless Steven and Naomi, who took in David and Paloma’s large family upon their arrival.

A friend at the Spanish embassy informed David and Paloma that the international community had put quite some pressure on the Latvian government, so much so that the inspector asked David what his job was, and whether he has any relatives working in the government. The Spanish Embassy, which has been trying to help them throughout this whole ordeal, has asked David and Paloma to write down their story. They want to use it to get justice and put pressure on the Latvian government.

(Excerpts of a letter from David and Paloma to Mama:) Thank you so much for your note and the prophecies you received from the Lord during our time of persecution in Latvia, many of which have already been fulfilled! (Editor’s note: The Lord encouraged David, Paloma and their family, promising that He would protect, deliver and reward them for their willingness to endure persecution. He also commended them for their willingness to live by faith, and exhorted them not to worry or fear that they have too many children to continue serving Him on the mission field.)

Tomorrow is my due date for number 11! Five days after arriving in Sweden we got a flat (apartment). That is a miracle, as it’s very difficult to rent a flat unless you are registered. The same afternoon that we signed the contract, someone unexpectedly called the Home, offering to donate furniture! The Lord is supplying all our needs.

We are praying that within three months we can be on the road again with our new baby and a new challenge ahead of us in a fertile mission field. Time is short and we must work while it is light. (End of excerpts from David and Paloma’s letter to Mama.)

We had a moving experience meeting a 78-year-old German Catholic missionary who has been on this island for the past 35 years. He shared stories with us about the troubled times during WW2 in Europe, and humbly served us a very nice lunch. Food is scarce on this island, and it was the first good meal we’d eaten since we got there five days earlier.

The Enemy fought us every day with sickness, and other impediments, but the Lord kept healing and strengthening us, helping us to stay on the attack through prayer in order to reach this isolated island with His message! As Dad said, “If you do it the right way, the Devil will fight you” (ML #241:1). The Lord helped us to distribute 92 Indonesian New Testaments, 148 tapes and 903 posters, and win 326 souls into His Kingdom! TYJ!

TAWAIN

(From Abe and Mercy:) Since we are a small Home with quite a few young children, we aren’t able to send out many outreach teams, but that doesn’t stop the Lord from sending needy souls across our path and giving us ample opportunity to let His light shine!

“Endlessly hungry, dissatisfied desires...” That’s how a young Korean woman described her life to us. The first day Go-Nee met us, she fell in love with us and our children. We read her the tract “Christmas Gifts For You”, and when we came to the part where Jesus offers His unconditional love and peace of mind, she cried tears of joy and excitement, saying how these words expressed her heart-cry exactly. “This was written for me,” she exclaimed! That evening she prayed to receive Jesus into her heart.

She began visiting us regularly to read from Treasures. After reading the article “All Things Work Together For Good,” she realized how her many sufferings and breakthroughs have taught her compassion, love and made her search for God. A few days later she brought us the following note.

“Endlessly hungry, dissatisfied desires, feeling despair without knowing why. Searching for something new, falling relationships with people; hurting myself, despising myself. — That’s what I used to be before I met the Family. Over and over I pretended to be someone else and lost the real me. It was a long hard road for me. Was there any reason to keep breathing? But God never turned His back on me. He was there. Now I know it hurt Him more than me. Now I know — God is there, waiting for me. I don’t need to continue my restless search. At last the hardship which is part of life is not so hard anymore, because Someone is here with me, watching me, holding my hands. Don’t be afraid. Just reach out your hands and there will be the answer.”

Go-Nee speaks English quite well and is now helping to translate some of our materials into Korean.

Mary is a woman in her late 30s with two children. She was introduced to us by a friend who wanted us to teach her children English. Mercy witnessed to her, as we usually do with those who come to learn English, and we tried to show her love and understand her personal situation.

Two days later she called and talked to Mercy for one hour on the phone. She was crying, and said she wanted to kill herself. Her married life had gone from bad to worse during the past seven years and she was miserable. Mercy told her that there was Someone Who could help her any time she needed help, and she prayed with her on the phone.

Later she told us, “I know it is very far for me and my girls to come to your house, but coming here is a taste of Heaven for us. To see happy people and happy children is such a different world from my troubled and messed-up life.” Now, as we teach her children English, Mary takes time to study the Word each week.
